United Way Set to Conduct $16 Million County Appeal

United Way, Inc. is now ready to conduct its first $16 million countywide appeal.

This will mark Los Angeles County's first step toward unity in charitable fund raising.

There will be 31 fall campaigns here this fall. United Way combines 32 formerly independent Community Chest funds, and now covers 96 per cent of the population and 95 per cent of the money raised by these organizations last year.

United Way seeks adequate support for 300 services in 155 communities. It provides corporations a method to measure their support against the human needs in the larger and growing industrial area in which they do business, officials say.

United Way means that employed people can now give one hour's pay per month where they work for services where they live, and that individuals and homemakers can give their increased personal support to help their neighbors throughout the county.

United Way is the biggest package of charitable services in the county. Its life and vitality are rooted in the volunteer strength and know-how of people in communities. It is organized to utilize these strengths, to revive and promote all important volunteer leadership so necessary to the preservation of American Democracy, officials say.

Union of People
It is even more than an efficient, effective way of meeting human needs. United Way is a union of people who give and who want fewer charitable appeals.

Those who want stewardship of funds, of communities which agree that competition is detrimental to all causes, and of agencies which realize that increased population and progress means increased need for services in this, the second largest metropolitan area in the country, its leaders state.

The General board of directors of United Way, representative of 155 communities, has established an open door policy for inclusion of causes which wish to join and which meet admission criteria.

Standards require that services must be needed, that they are well managed.

by a volunteer board of directors, that they have operated for full two years with successful financing of program, that they have transferable financial support available on admission and are certified for federal and state tax exemption.

Invitations have been extended to major causes conducting independent campaigns. Other agencies have submitted applications to join. A volunteer admission committee will review all applications. Admissions will be made only on the basis of requirements, requirements which insure responsible management and service to people.

Backing Cited
Business men, organized labor, professional men and women endorse and back United Way. Five hundred and thirty-five county leaders and thirty-seven leaders have signed commitments of support. One hundred and sixty-seven leaders signed articles of incorporation. Three thousand people throughout the county worked on organization, review and study committees for three years leading up to the formation of United Way.

Business and labor recognize that through cooperation all communities will be better served; employees will be able to give where they work for services where they live; business will be able to concentrate for increased effectiveness the time, effort and man-hours previously scattered among many campaigns.

United Way has the full cooperation of: AID United Givers; the Permanent Charities Committee of the Motion Picture Industry; Radio - Television - Recording and Advertising Charities, Inc.; and large industrially centered employee giving plans.

Because of the scope and objectives of United Way to provide support for a countywide community, the board of directors urges the public to carefully consider gifts this year.

Bob Christie Elected to Bridge Board

At its recently quarterly membership meeting in its national headquarters ABCO (Association of Bridge Club Owners) elected Robert (Bob) Christie to its executive board.

ABCO is an association of bridge club owners to promote bridge and discuss mutual problems of player ethics, standards, teaching, etc.

Christie has long been interested in the advancement of bridge and creation of rigid ethics for the game. His outstanding work in being one of the founders of the local Torrance unit of the American Contract Bridge League and his reputation for teaching bridge to more than 5000 students made the membership decision by ABCO unanimous.
